

Problem Statement:

It is hard for many college students to make new relationships with people when the main events on campus are so packed and stressful.

College students, especially freshmen and transfer students, have a hard time making new connections and relationships. At college campus events, it is hard to meet new people due to how crowded and stressful they can be. Often, events will overfill, or people won't find out about them, so they are unable to attend. It is hard to have a genuine and meaningful conversation with people in these conditions.